From the Pastor

Excerpt from: Getting Sunday right: Family rediscovers the power of the Sabbath by Jonathan Liedl

Scripture makes clear that the Sabbath is a day of rest. But for most Americans, including many Catholics, it ends up being a day of restlessness. A nice brunch might be prioritized, trips to the office might be foregone and Mass might even be included. But rather than fulfillment, joy and refreshment, the Sunday experience of many today is marked by anxiousness, malaise and even a degree of depression. Such discontent in the Lord's Day is evident in terms such as "the Sunday scaries" and "the Sunday blues." Research in 2017 from job site Monster.com found that 76 percent of Americans (compared to only 47 percent of respondents from other nations) reported having "really bad" Sunday-night anxiety.

"Most people know that they don't have Sunday right." Said Michael Naughton, director of the Center for Catholic Studies at the University of St. Thomas. He and his wife Teresa, parents of five, said there was a time when their Sundays were "different" from the other days of the week, but they were not necessarily "special." Sundays were approached as a kind of "mop-up day," a day to get to housework and side projects that were left over from the workweek, with, in the words of Teresa, "Mass and some worship wedged in between." The Lord's Day might not have been a typical workday, but it was still defined by the same mentality and it failed to provide much in the way of true rest and refreshment.

In 2000, the Naughtons committed to not working on the Sabbath. No chores or housework. No homework for the kids. The effects were immediately noticeable. "It was like Christmas morning," Michael said of that first work-free Sunday. It was a day simply to "receive, a day to rest, but it's a resting in the Lord, not just resting from activity," Michael explained. "It requires a shift in mindset," Teresa added. "It's a reorientation to who I am, what I am created for, and who I am in God's plan."

"If we are to get Monday right, we must get Sunday right." Michael suggests three essential habits for living the Lord's Day well: silence, celebration and charity. For example, to cultivate silence, they generally fast from screens and technology on Sundays.

Celebrating is about radically affirming the goodness of the Lord, and the heart of this celebration is the Sunday Mass. Preparation for fruitfully entering into the Mass begins with praying with the Sunday readings earlier in the week. The trip to church itself is also treated as a time of preparation, a time that Teresa likes to think of as a "pilgrimage" that Catholics around the world are making together. The celebratory character of Sunday also extends beyond the Eucharistic liturgy. In preparation for the Lord's Day, the table is set with a runner that matches the liturgical season. At some point Sunday morning, the Naughtons light a special Sabbath candle and say a Lord's Day prayer. Similarly, the family will try to end the day with a prayer of gratitude for the gifts of another Sabbath. Joy is cultivated in other ways too, such as a Sunday brunch, board games and books, a walk outside, recreation with neighborhood families and simple time together in conversation.

Finally, the Naughtons live out the traditional practice of doing charitable works on Sunday in a variety of ways. Activities could include volunteering at a homeless shelter or calling a family member who's shut in.

The Naughtons might take Sunday more seriously than most, but they'll be the first to say that getting Sunday right is an ongoing process, never rigidly set in stone, and open to renewal, intentionality and a bit of flexibility. "When you protect Sunday, you protect your relationship with the Lord and you protect your family and your marriage," Michael said. "And we need a lot of protection."
