Pastor's Perspective: Labor Day 2020

While Labor Day weekend has essentially become the last hurrah of Summer, it is also a day to reflect on the dignity of work and workers as well as work as a gift. As much as we might look forward to time off, those who desire to work, but for any of a variety of reasons can't, sometimes have the better perspective that work truly is a gift. Perhaps this year we can also be grateful for the work that others do and from which we benefit. The following are excerpts from Archbishop Coakley's reflections on Labor Day. The full text can be found at usccb.org.

"This Labor Day is a somber one. The COVID-19 pandemic goes on. Economic circumstances for so many families are stressful or even dire. Anxiety is high. Millions are out of work and wondering how they will pay the bills. And for workers deemed "essential" who continue to work outside the home, there is the heightened danger of exposure to the virus. Yet, as Pope Francis points out in a set of beautiful and challenging reflections on the pandemic, "In this wasteland, the Lord is committed to the regeneration of beauty and rebirth of hope: 'Behold, I am doing something new: right now it is sprouting, don't you see it?' (Is 43:19). God never abandons his people, he is always close to them, especially when pain becomes more present." As God declares to John in Revelation: "Behold, I make all things new" (Rev. 21:5). God knows the challenges we face and the loss and grief we feel. The question to us is this: will we pray for and willingly participate in God's work healing the hurt, loss, and injustice that this pandemic has caused and exposed? Will we offer all we can to the Lord to "make all things new?"

As public reports show, the virus has spread widely among essential workers such as meat packers, agricultural workers, healthcare providers, janitors, transit workers, emergency responders, and others. As a result, low wage workers, migrant workers, and workers of color, have borne a disproportionate share of the costs of the pandemic. Before the pandemic, a significant number of Americans were trapped in low wage jobs, with insecurity around food, housing, and health care, and with little opportunity for savings or advancing in their career. Those same workers have been hit particularly hard, and, it is devastating to say, many have paid with their life.

In order to protect the dignity of work and the rights of workers, we are each called to practice solidarity with those in harm's way. In addition, we can offer charitable assistance to all those who have become unemployed during this time by donating to local food banks and Catholic Charities agencies. Catholic Charities helped 13 million people last year, and the demand has increased 30-50% so far during the pandemic and is anticipated to increase. Catholic hospitals are also strained as doctors, nurses, and staff have also been working relentlessly, and have in many instances done so at a loss of significant resources."
